Brain Fitness Facts

Restoring Plasticity Could Be The Secret To Reversing Brain Damage

(NAPS)—For the world's leading neuroscientists, unlocking the brain's capacity to stimulate neural plasticity has become something of a Holy Grail.

That's because enhancing plasticity is perhaps the most important step towards repairing central nervous system (CNS) damage. In fact, it can have a profound impact across multiple neurological functions, including improving motor, sensory and cognitive abilities such as memory.

People marvel at how children are able to learn things so quickly and easily. This ability is mediated by their brains' nimble neural plasticity. Neuroscientists once believed that neuroplasticity manifested predominately during childhood. However, research in the mid-20th century demonstrated that many aspects of the brain can be altered, even in adulthood. Still, the developing brain has a significantly higher degree of plasticity than the adult brain.

The human brain consists of enormous networks of neurons. They act as messengers that use electrical impulses and chemical signals to transmit information between different areas of the brain, and between the brain and the nervous system. Even a very simple task, such as standing or sitting, typically involves millions of interconnected neurons. Damage to these interconnected systems can be catastrophic.

Enhancing plasticity could be a potential treatment option for any condition where there is extensive damage to CNS tissue. Enhancing plasticity results in 'axonal sprouting' - a process where surviving neurons produce fine collateral sprouts from the intact remaining axons. In other words, healthy surviving neurons become fortified and form new connections in areas of the brain or spinal cord where most neurons are damaged or have died.

"Regeneration of damaged neurons, along with sprouting, together lead to plasticity," says Dr. Jerry Silver, a professor in the Department of Neurosciences at Case Western Reserve University's School of Medicine and co-inventor and advisor at NervGen Pharma. "Medical science already knows how to promote axonal regeneration, which involves getting neurons to grow across an injury site. But what's also needed to ensure significant recovery is sprouting." Dr. Silver discovered the novel pep-tide—NVG-291—which has been shown in animal studies to promote plasticity.

Your brain may be better able to heal itself than was once thought, suggests Dr. Jerry Silver, professor in the Department of Neurosciences at Case Western Reserve University's School of Medicine.

NervGen is developing NVG-291, the novel drug candidate that could revolutionize treatment for conditions associated with central nervous system damage, including Alzheimer's disease. It promises to be a world's first—a drug candidate that appears to be able to unlock the central nervous system's ability to repair itself. Medical science will learn if NVG-291 is a prospective wonder drug by 2023 when Phase 2 clinical trials are expected to be well underway.

Existing drugs can only limit or contain the extent of the damage that is the root cause of the world's hardest to treat neurodegenerative diseases. For instance, existing drug therapies that target Alzheimer's disease - the most pervasive of them all - have only succeeded in marginally decelerating its progression. This offers little comfort to the afflicted or to their loved ones.

"NVG-291 presents a new paradigm for treating Alzheimer's disease," said Dr. George Perry, Editor-in-Chief of the Journal of Alzheimer's Disease and member of NervGen's Alzheimer's Clinical Advisory Board. "Nobody else in medical research is taking this same approach. It is essentially enabling the brain to repair itself."

This Body of Death

"O wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from this body of death? I thank God; through Jesus Christ our Lord!" (Rom. 7:24-25)

Some scholars think that Paul, in the above verse, was alluding to the barbaric practice of the Romans, and others before them, who strapped a dead body to a prisoner who was captured in battle. The dead body hindered the prisoner from escaping as he was marched off to captivity. Verse 24 can literally be translated, "O wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from this dead body?"

Of course, Paul was making a spiritual application, and was asking, "Who will deliver me from the bondage of sin which shackles and condemns?" Paul answers his own question in verse 25. Deliverance from the wretched, miserable state of sin comes only through Jesus Christ our Lord. He is the Redeemer, Savior, and Deliverer.

Friends, have you been delivered from the body of sin and death? If not, why choose to die? "For I have no pleasure in the death of one who dies," says the Lord God. "Therefore turn and live!" (Ezek. 18:32)
